All Awful Ride.

J. G. Swigert, of Cincinnati, is stopping with a friend in Kansas City, Missouri, on his way home from the West. He tells a story of a marvelous escape from death, and considers himself lucky in getting off with Mr Swigert left Denver on a night train for Kaness City last week. About ten o'clock in the evening he went to the rear platform of the car to finish a smoke. The night was dark, and the little red lantern gave a very indistinct light. He remained outside about ten minutes, when becoming chilled by the damp air, be turned to ester the car. Just as he let loose of the iron railing the car iurched and he was thrown violently against the bell rope, which was tied at the end of the car. It gave way and be fell through toward the ground, leet first.

Had he fallen to the ground he would in all probability have been instantly killed.

The train was making up for lost time and was on a down grade, going at the rate of fifty miles an hour. As he fell his coat, which was buttoned tight, caught in a red connected with the coupling apparatur, and he found himself dangling at the end of the our besd down.

At firs', completely dezed by the accident, he begen to twist and turn to relieve himself from the rod. He soon recognized the fact that to fall would result in broken bones, if not instant death. Caught as he was with his back to the car with his head hanging down he could do nothing a Loss bimself. He tried shouting with all ble might, out the door of the sleeper was closed and be found it utterly useless. Judging by the time Mr. Swigert thought be could not be very far from a station, and with considerable presence of mind decided that the only thing to do was to remain quiet and trust to the strength of his coat. He says to has no idea how long he rede in this frightful way expecting every instant to have his brains dashed cut against the ties. I' was probably only a few minutes, but it seemed hours to him.

At last the coat gave way, and, as the train dashed around a curve, he was thrown violently to the ground and lest consciousness. When he recovered his senses he le' about and found that he was lying by the side of the road. He felt bus little pain. It was very dark and was raining. Reaching out his band he felt a foot in front of him, just beyond his head. He tried to get up to see to whom it belonged and found that it was his own. His right thigh had been broken and doubled up in that shape. Utterly belpless and with the pain increasing every minute he could do nothing but call for assistance. He was finally found by a track walker, and assistance being called he was taken to Cheyenne Wells, arriving there about day-

ANCIENT MINERS OF MEXICO .- Distinct traces of ancient mining operations have been discovered near the Santa Fe mine at Chiapas. An old shaft was found some time sgo, and this Superintendent Stockdale of the Santa Fe mine has cleared out. It was filled up for some distance with black surface soil. Then came a solid tamp-ing of rock different from the debris of the dump, and below this again a mass of incly ground mill tailings. This was all the more curious since not a trace of any buildings can be found. High above these workings, which are close to the Santa Fe mine, was a patural cross cutting the Victoria, which was supposed to be a virgin mine. which was supposed to be a virgin limite.

After passing through seventy-five feet of good ere, mostly copper, again old workings were encountered, apparently following a soft streak on the foot walls. These have not yet been explored, but rocks thrown down can be heard bounding downward until the sound is lost in the distance, showing that the works are of great depth. The levels all show marks of the action of fire, and masses of charcoal and haif-burned brands are found in every direction, but there are no marks of drills or tools of any kind. That the ancient miners were work ing for free gold, and nothing else, seems certain, for not only are large masses of rich gold-bearing peacock copper found thrown aside as valueless, but a strong velo which the ancients seem to have missed, or considered not rich enough to work, has lately been struck as me forty motres from the Santa Fe mine. This new strike is twelve or fourteen feet between walls, and contains great boulders of peacock copper, but alongside this, on the foot wall, is a soft streak from a foot to ten inches wide. This is found to be extremely rich in coarse free gold, sveraging from three to four ounces a ton.
